Cambridge Chinese Rare Book and Manuscript Collections: Discoveries and Rediscoveries of Items Related to Robert Morrison and the Taiping Rebellion.

Kang Tchou | 朱卫康

Candidate for Doctor of Philosophy in Chinese Studies at Cambridge University

The Chinese collections in the Cambridge University Libraries are well known to British and European sinologists. My paper will focus on the discoveries and rediscoveries that I made while doing research in three collections at Cambridge. I will be presenting some of the latest finds that I have helped to bring to light in the University Library Chinese Collection, the Needham Research Institute Library, and St. Catharine's College Library. In the year that I have just spent in Cambridge doing research for my PhD in Chinese Studies, I have explored in depth three collections: The Wade Collection of rare Chinese books and manuscripts in The Aoi Pavilion of the Cambridge University Library; the Chinese collection of the East Asian History of Science Library in the Needham Research Institute; and the Thomas Jarrett Collection in the St. Catharine's College Library rare books. My presentation will focus on one specific item from each of these collections: a rare Taiping calendar from The Wade Collection; a dramatic text entitled “Who Was Lindley”: A Colloquy for Six Voices” by Charles A. Curwen from the Chinese collection of the East Asian History of Science Library; and one part of Robert Morrison’s very rare Dictionary of the Chinese Language discovered in the Jarrett Collection in the St. Catharine’s College rare books.
